Looking Ahead To Our 40th Anniversary: Ethnic Community Conversations

The Ethnic Heritage Council of the Pacific Northwest was founded in January 1980 by representatives of 57 organizations with shared values, interests, and concerns. These groups, stewards of their special experiences in the Pacific Northwest, began to learn from each other and collaborate under the umbrella of a ‘council’. In 2018, EHC reinvigorated that concept of ‘council’ by hosting and facilitating ethnic community conversations, most notably on the subject of establishing a multi-cultural center that could serve all members, particularly smaller organizations and individuals. As we look to our 40th anniversary celebration in 2020, we are considering expanding our Annual Meeting and Awards ceremony to a full-day or weekend event that would demonstrate what such a multi-cultural center might look like, with workshops, kiosks, displays, shared work spaces and even an international coffee/tea house. Your thoughts on this or other relevant topics benefiting EHC members are important to us! Please send them to: rsvp@ethnicheritagecouncil.org.

Washington Hall - A Project Of Historic Seattle

Between 1906-1908, the regrading of Jackson Street, an area between Pioneer Square and 12th Avenue, improved access to various points east and south and created the potential for expansion of the business district. The Danish Brotherhood, Lodge 29 of Seattle, believed the renewed potential of the area, adjacent to the wealthy residential neighborhood of First Hill, might strengthen the economic and cultural standing of Danish immigrants in Seattle. For 65 years, Washington Hall served as a fraternal lodge and center for the social and cultural activities of Seattle’s Danish immigrant population.

Over the years, the Central District/North Rainier Valley area surrounding Washington Hall has been home to many recent immigrant and ethnic communities. From early on, the Danish community opened up Washington Hall to its neighbors, including but not limited to: African-American (jazz concerts, dances, meetings), Jewish (Sephardic and Ashkenazi Theater), Danish (theater, meetings), Croatian (theater, meetings), Filipino (dances, Miss Filipino Queen pageants). These neighbors held dances, concerts, pageants, New Year’s Eve parties, weddings, theatrical performances, religious services, cultural events, classes, graduation parties, community and political meetings. Many social and political movements of the twentieth century United States are also reflected in Washington Hall’s dynamic history, including a nascent Black empowerment movement in in the 1920s and labor union meetings in the 1960s. During the Cold War era, some of the groups renting Washington Hall came under surveillance by government agencies suspicious of “un-American activities.” Today we’re proud of Washington Hall’s history as a site of community activism.

From 1973 to 2009, the hall was owned by the Sons of Haiti, an African-American Masonic lodge, during which time artists flourished there, including now world-famous On the Boards. The building was purchased by Historic Seattle in 2009 with restoration completed in 2016. It has been used by St. Michael Ethiopian Orthodox Church and has served as the temporary home of Jamaatul Ikhlas Muslim Community Center. Current anchor groups are 206 Zulu, promoting Hip Hop culture; Voices Rising, a youth LGBT organization; and Hidmo, an Eritrean community culture and food group.

Ana Mari Cauce, PhD

2019 EHC Spirit of Liberty Award

University of Washington President Ana Mari Cauce’s dedication to inclusion and education may have its roots all the way back to kindergarten. Her family had settled in Miami before the majority of Cuban immigrants arrived in the U.S., so her teacher made Ana Mari cultural liaison, translating for immigrant children and parents. When people applaud her skill in bringing people together, she says it comes in part from helping her parents understand the American culture. Her father had served as minister of education in Cuba, but in America both parents held working class jobs, including work in a shoe factory. President Cauce’s PhD in psychology, with a concentration in child clinical and community psychology led to a focus on diversity concerns. She is a professor of Psychology and American Ethnic Studies, with secondary appointments in the Department of Gender, Women and Sexuality Studies and the College of Education.

Her research and teaching have prepared her for the cultural divides in the U.S. today, especially as they result in inequities in access to education. Almost a decade before she became president, she was instrumental in launching the Husky Promise, which guarantees full tuition for eligible Washington students who otherwise could not attend college. She meets with students on a regular basis, pointing out to the community at large that higher education credentials are increasingly important for entry into middle class professions. Her parents never returned to Cuba, but Cauce has returned several times, including a trip on the inaugural flight of Alaska Airlines to Havana in 2017. “I feel incredibly fortunate,” she says, “to be able to help build the connections that will surely grow between the city and country of my birth and Seattle and the state of Washington, which is now my home.” Sheila Bartanen

Edith E. Christensen, EdD

2019 Aspasia Phoutrides Pulakis
Memorial Award

“Edith came in like a storm,” says Eva Bryce, a fellow member of the Northwest Danish Association, describing the impact of Edith Christensen’s leadership skills. “In the past eleven years she has served as president, manager, property manager and event coordinator to keep the Danish Community in the Puget Sound Region connected.” Born in a Danish enclave in Montana and speaking only Danish until school entrance, Edith moved with her family to Seattle as a child. Their first apartment was a block from Washington Hall, where her father continued his membership in the Danish Brotherhood and her mother the Sisterhood. Their deep involvements are the seeds that blossomed as Edith’s cultural passion. Originally educated as a pharmacist, Edith founded Evergreen School for Gifted Children in Shoreline in 1963. Bob Fuller, former board member of The Evergreen School calls her a “fiscal conservative,” whose methods put her creativity at full throttle. She started with six students and today Evergreen has more than 470. She took no salary for the first 14 years and was aided in the financial planning by her very committed husband, Frank, a CPA. While teaching and running the school she earned both a master’s degree and a doctorate in education. Alfred Yi, now enrolled at the University of Pennsylvania, credits Edith’s teaching and the school for giving him direction early in life. “Coming from a family who speaks Korean in the house and with no experience navigating higher education, Dr. Christensen helped facilitate my learning and growth to become a successful student.” The last two years of their Evergreen experience, seventh and eighth grade students prepare for an overseas trip through language, culture and history sessions, and a program begun by Edith and another teacher many years ago. “When Edith sees a problem, she will find a solution,” says Sonja Kromann, NWDA board member. “Under Edith’s leadership the Danish Association’s building stays fully rented. There is a library, a monthly gathering at a Danish café, countless fundraising events from live auctions and aquavit tastings to online fundraising, and special focus on youth with the Dane Camp and a young Danish parents child group. The NWDA has taken on the leadership, administrative, and financial support of two major programs in the Pacific Northwest Danish American community: the Danish American Cultural Retreat now in its 41st year, and the Himmelbjerget Danish Camp for tweens and teens. Both these programs take place at the Menucha Retreat and Conference Center in Corbett, Oregon. Edith’s impact in partnership with the Danish Community in the Northwest has indeed been felt far beyond Seattle. Edith can be reached at seattle@nwdanish.org.

Joe Seamons and Ben Hunter

2019 Gordon Ekvall Tracie Memorial Award

Ben Hunter and Joe Seamons are researchers and performers of African American folk music and other American roots styles, particularly from the early 1900s, when thousands of immigrants arrived in the Northwest for farming, logging, fishing and coal mining. On May 19 at the Annual Dinner Meeting and Awards Ceremony of the Ethnic Heritage Council, Ben and Joe will perform in Washington Hall, where many ethnic communities of the early 1900s held their events before building their own halls and churches. Hunter, born in the African nation of Lesotho and raised in Phoenix, Arizona, is a classically trained violinist who studied music around the world. Seamons, raised in the backwoods of Northwestern Oregon, plays the banjo and is devoted to Northwest American folk music. He is the executive producer of the Smithsonian Folkways album, “Roll Columbia: Woody Guthrie’s 26 Northwest Songs.” Hunter and Seamons are nationally and internationally acclaimed, winning the International Blues Challenge in 2016. Their local impact is profound. When Ben and Joe invited Sidney Deering of the Radost Folk Ensemble to do a dance workshop, they offered an amount lower than she usually charges. “But when I got to their Hillman City Collaboratory space,” says Deering, “and saw what they were doing, I said ‘Keep your money. You guys are saving the world through folklore.’” “Ben and Joe are pillars in the South Seattle community,” says Beth Fortune, Director of Orchestras at Seattle’s Washington Middle School and now at Ballard High School. She is also Director of Education for Wintergrass Festival, where Ben and Joe have been instrumental in the teen programming as educators and performers. “They mentor and impact students not only in the learning of music, but also in the making of positive life choices. They open people’s eyes to pressing issues involving the underrepresented,” says Fortune. Professor Patricia Campbell of the University of Washington Music Department invites Ben and Joe to her classes as artist-teachers. “Their presentations are so impressive,” says Campbell, as they artfully deliver the essence of their accumulated knowledge of music, education, and culture to music students who are preparing for work in schools and the community.” Ben and Joe bring the past to life with music and storytelling to show how the past still lives in the present. They are also reviving the spirit of Seattle’s Black & Tan Club (1919-1967) with a forthcoming cooperative restaurant and performing arts venue, Black & Tan Hall. Ben and Joe can be reached at BenandJoeBand@gmail.com.

The Spirit of Liberty Award is given to a naturalized citizen who has made significant contributions to his or her ethnic community and ethnic heritage, as well as to the community at large. It was first presented in 1986 to a Greek-American elder, Effie Wells, by renowned actress Carol Channing, who was performing in Seattle at the time. From 1986 until 2015 the award was presented annually as a highlight of the July 4 Naturalization Ceremony at Seattle Center, a public program created by the Ethnic Heritage Council in 1986 in recognition of the vital role played by new citizens of the United States.

Aspasia Phoutrides Pulakis learned to read and write both New Testament and Modern Greek from her father, Rev. Stephanos E. Phoutrides, the founding priest of Greek Church of the Assumption of Seattle. Her graduate work included field work in ethnic archival and library collections at the Immigration History Research Center (IHRC), University of Minnesota. Until shortly before her death in 1981, she worked with Jean Coberly of the Seattle Public Library to develop the first Ethnic Heritage Council CONTACT directory of ethnic organizations; and with fellow-parishioner Joann Nicon directed an extensive oral history project to commemorate the 40th Anniversary of the Church of the Assumption.

Gordon Ekvall Tracie devoted more than four decades to the study and promotion of Nordic traditional music and dance. At his death in 1988, Gordon bequeathed his extensive music, dance, and text collections to Skandia Music Foundation, with the request that the collections be kept together and made available to the public. Through the cooperative efforts of the foundation and Nordic Heritage Museum, the Tracie Music Library was opened in March 1995 at the Nordic Heritage Museum as a research archive of traditional Nordic music and dance.
